The Coroner to-day began his investigation of the fatalities resulting from the rioting. No verdict was returned.

There were no more deaths to-day. The three men believed to be fatally shot are in about the same condition as yesterday. There were two funerals of mob victims this afternoon. August Jordan and Hazel Allman were buried. The funeral of Miss Allman was held a day sooner than announced to prevent excitement.

The police authorities say that while many of those shot by the militia were reputable citizens and no doubt drawn into he crowd from curiosity, two or three of those killed were disturbers and had caused the police trouble before. A revolver found on one of the dead bodies had three empty chambers, the cartridges having been recently exploded. Miss Hazel Allman, who was buried to-day, was killed in the rlot at the Public Square Monday night. She met her death while seated in a buggy between her father and mother. The buggy was about a half block away from the scene of the shooting. A bullet from a Winchester rifle struck her in the left side and came out at right, killing her instantly.

Miss Allman was 15 years old and a beautiful girl. Her parents are heartbroken over the affair and her mother is in the hands of a physician.

Miss Aliman begged her parents to let her go and see the crowds at the jail, and they went with her, not being willing for her to go gione.

COMBINE SENATORS REFERRED TO BOODLE AS "DRIFT-WOOD,"

Former Senator Charles E. Peers, Examined by the Grand Jury, Was Unable to Recall Having Mentioned a Bid of $10,000 to Richard D. Lancaster in Connection With Excise Commissioner Fee Bill -E. Y. Mitchell Denies Charge of Boodling in County Warrant Legislation.

A conflict of statements and memories regarding boodle or "drift wood," occurred in connection with the legislative investigation at the Four Courts yesterday ante-room to the Grand Jury chamber and How Sheriff Kratz will bring the negro discussed the construction which the According to Lancaster, Peers had told him during that session that there was $10,000 in the bill to prevent the abolition of the Excise Commissioner's office in St

This measure was introduced in that se sion by Dennis Devoy of St. Louis, who wished to have a commission of three men, each drawing a salary of $4,000, collect al of the licenses in this city. The bill was fought by the Execise Commissioner. According to Lancaser, Peers made the statement about the $10,000 to him while the bill was being discussed between themselves. Peers denied that he had made any such statement. He said yesterday that he had told Lancaster that the bill ought to be defeated because the office was a good one or which to draw for party purposes, as the fees were so large. Nothing was said about $10,000 according to Peers. After Peers had argued the question with Lancaster, he went before the Grand Jury for about ten minutes and was then excused. Lancaster followed him and it is supposed repeated his story. In 1897, the Excise Commissioner drew all of the fees from the office.

Lancaster was questioned at length conerning boodle deals and boodle methods it the Senate in the sessions of 1895 and 1897. that he told much of a decidedly picturesque nature.

Among other things comes an explanation of the expression "driftwood," which was much in use at that time. Senators would slyly remark to each other, "Any driftwood in sight?" The answer might be affirmative or negative, but uproarious laughter always resulted. "Driftwood," it now appears, was boodle.

Until the nineties, the testimony thus far goes to show, there was little boodling. But about that time a combine of pinetee members in the Senate was formed, there being four other Senators who were used of casionally, swelling the total to 23 out of 54. The individual members of the combine were constantly looking for "business," or driftwood," and it is estimated that in the palmy days of the combine the profits to the energetic Senator averaged from 34,000 to $5,000 a session.

In one instance a certain manufactures in St. Louis was slow in putting up the money which the boodlers demanded. Then The purpose of Judge Hagell's came the day for the passage of the bill. A combine member went to St. Louis to bring the matter forcibly before the manufac turer. The result was that, just before the bill came up, the Senator in St. Louis wired a trusty colleague in the capital: "River's rising; driftwood coming down

Which meant that the manufacturer had opened his coffers. The bill was killed.

This combine acted just as did the House combine of the St. Louis Municipal Assembly. A member would be delegated to "see" • prevented by troops from seizing • certain interests and make terms. It is now understood that the combine regarded the insurance people as "easy," and levied regto the King in favor of granting a ular tribute upon them. Then, when out of pecket money, they would hold up the stock yards, the railroads, or whatever business promised to be a good "producer."

Another witness before the Grand Jury was E. Y. Mitchell of Springfield, who was their belief that the granting of the destanding warrants to set aside 20 per cent a ship Louisiana of the Elder-Dempster destanding warrants to set aside 20 per cent a ship Louisiana of the Elder-Dempster monopoly is necessary to enable the of their current revenues for redemption | line, from Bremen, began to-day uncurrant growers to live.

in the bill and I am certain no money was used in connection with its passage. It was originally fathered by Representative Wray of Barton County, who introduced it in the House. Senator F. M. McDavis of Springfield introduced the bill in the Senate." Mr. Mitchell displayed some feeling over having been brought before the Grand Jury on a matter which he insisted was entirely regular and without spot or blemish.

Excise Commissioner James M. Seiber was before the Grand Jury and afterward had a long talk with Circuit Attorney Folk in the assistant's room. It is said that certain legislation was touched upon as wel as the local winercom situation. Mr. Seibert is said to have been asked how Representative Farley was persuaded to hold his bill providing for a reduction it the fees of the Excise Commissioner's office at the last session. In explanation, Mr. Seibert explained that a good share of the fees were used for party purposes, and that this argument was sufficient to prevent the nactment of legislation.

It is barely possible that Colonel William H. Phelps of the Missouri Pacific Railway will return to St. Louis to-day or to-mor low and be ready to testify before the Grand Jury. If he does come, he probably will exercise the rights of the Constitution and refuse to testify on the grounds that it would incriminate him, the same ground as that taken by John H. Carroll of the Burlington.

The Lehmann bribery case is set for trial to-day. If there is no continuance, the Grand Jury will keep up its work on legis lative matters. Otherwise, it will be several days before the inquiry is resumed.

The angle at which the station will stand gives the railway company a triangular piece of ground in front. This strip will be laid out in a plaza to form a part of the general plaza which the Exposition will have before the gateway. Granitoid will be the promenade throughout the station and plaza. The plaza becomes a distributing point for the crowds. Visitors will have plenty of space in which to disentangle from the riving and departing crowds. It makes the taking of automobiles, trains or street railway lines comparatively easy. More than $175,000 will be spent by the Wabash Railway Company in building its station and the terminals. The station is expected to cost at least $50,000. Trackage facilities and ornamentation must consum a large part of the general sum, while additional rolling stock and other preparations make up the difference.

OTHER LINES TO USE DEPOT. The Wabash management does not intend o exclude other railways from the use of its station and terminals. Any other line which desires to discharge passengers at this point can do so by payment of usual trackage and depot charges. It is undertood that the Rock Island will probably unload passengers at this station. If that line, however, prefers to construct an independent station at Skinker road, it is not likely that objection will be raised. Certainly none will be raised by the Wabash, and it is to the interest of the Exposition management to have as many unonding points as the railways desire. An important phase of the terminal situation, as pointed out by a World's Fair official, is the ending of the Transit Company lines north of the main Wabash line across De Baliviere avenue.

This arrangement eliminates street railway terminals from the district between the Wabash main lines and the Forest Park line, thus causing the Lindell Rallway pavilion to be abandoned during the life of the Exposition.
